The Making of a Legend

It was a cool winter day in January 2012. I recently decided to work in a research lab with a new BME professor. She was showing me a lab and introducing me to the other students. As we walked through the door a blazing orange spot caught my eye. It belonged to a bright-eyed, dark-haired, eager, sophomore.

As we talked for a minute I thought about how young he looked. How would I ever connect with someone this young? What was I thinking going back to school at my age? At first his enthusiasm was contagious. I quickly settled into the lab and the daily functions. Later the enthusiasm and energy became a little grating.

I soon learned that this student was one of the “go to” kids for the deans. Eventually, I became part of the group that participated in everything. Then in Fall 2013 we both initiated with TBP. The competition was on. Who would get the most points (he did, I didn’t need as many)? Who would have the best bent (neither of us, there was a serious over achiever in our group)?

We both initiated and have been active members ever since. We both still work in the same lab, though it has moved. Other interesting facts about him, he is the youngest child in his family and a twin. He spent the summer doing research in Seattle and loved it. (I just visited and didn’t love it!) Through it all I’ve become rather fond of him, almost like a little brother.
